During our visit, we engaged with a group of boys and girls at the local park. The atmosphere was positive, and we had a productive discussion about general safety while out in the community. We also encouraged them to take responsibility for their environment by picking up litter and other rubbish in the area. Additionally, we talked about potential summer activities.

We then moved on to the beach and harbour area, where we interacted with the remaining young people in the village. They were receptive and engaged in friendly, informal conversations. We also shared information about the upcoming summer activities with them.

Overall, it was a positive and constructive session, with many of the young people recognizing and remembering us from previous visits.
